

Leicester, Mass., March 5, 1855.

Dear friend Webb.

An unusual period of silence has been observed between us - long enough to satisfy the most rigid Quaker; - quite unintentional, & without design on my part. I am in your debt for a letter; yours of Jan. 14th lying before me, & which (or the half of it) I am sending back to you, for the money-account upon it. With it, as you will see, I send a memorandum, the joint-work of Wallcut & myself. I believe all is plain-sailing.

The sole reason that I have not written to you is, absolutely, the want of time. I have had a very hard winter's work - it has been a very trying winter, - from the middle of January, for a ~~week~~ month onward, I was in a very miserable state of health, the effects of a violent & general cold which I had taken, - and when an occasional leisure hour came, I found myself exhausted & spiritless. Then, what time I could snatch for my foreign correspondents, seemed to be first & ~~most~~ chiefly due to Pillsbury & Miss Estlin, who have (the latter especially) kept me - & thro' me the rest of our friends, - most thoroughly, faithfully, & promptly informed on all the many points growing out of the London Conference. By the steamer of last week,

I wrote a full letter to Pillsbury - with a few lines to Miss E. - By that of the week before, a letter to Mr. & Miss E. - with some shorter business notes. - I have this day rec'd. Miss E.'s letter of Feb. 16., with enclosures. It puts a different feature, to some extent, on the ~~fact~~^{subject} of G. T.'s "mythical speech". It seems it is not all a myth - Mr. James, ^{Mr. Mathew,} and Mr. Moore of Manchester, testify to hearing a speech from him, embracing some of the topics & language, and particularly something eulogistic of the American A. S. Socy.; but from their testimony, ~~it~~^{with}, it appears not to have been a very remarkable speech; indeed Mr. James declares there was nothing in it which he should term "glowing". That such a speech, as the "Empire" put forth in January, was actually made by G. T. in the Lond. Conf., I must say, with the evidence before me, I cannot believe. Yet, after all abatements which may justly be made from it, it does ~~not~~ appear to me quite strange that neither Messrs. Pillsbury nor Bishop heard anything of it. Both of them must have had their attention very much sharpened to all that Thompson should say or do, that day, that, being present, they totally lost a "glowing tribute." to the Amn. Socy from his mouth is too hard to be believed; but why they should, both, have so entirely lost what he did say - for it is clear he did say something in behalf of the Amn. A.S. Society - is also very hard to be accounted for. — Mr. James's & Mr. Moore's testimony, - & the opinion which Mr. & Miss Estlin now entertain (so far as I can learn^{it}) - seem to bear out, & harmonize with, the ~~of~~ Conclusion to which I had come, & which I gave in my letter to Miss E. 2 weeks since, & to Pillsbury last week; - which was, that G. J. had ~~(perhaps confounded, & certainly)~~ incorporated into one speech a collection of ideas and sentiments which he had uttered during the day, to one & another, some of them in private and in Committee only, others in public & to the Conference; that he had ^{probably} ~~perhaps~~ confounded the times & occasions, & after that lapse of time could not exactly distinguish the lines which separated the public, from the more private remarks. - Since receiving ^{Miss E.'s letter} & weighing its varying testimony, I am inclined to blame G. J. less than before. I see no evidence of intentional desertion of the American Society, its principles & its friends

But I do see a weak compliance with a manœuvring, New Broad St, policy, quite unworthy of a mind like G. T.'s, and which I do not believe he would ever have consented to, for a moment, or looked at a second time, if he had not been under some obligation to Sturge & his party.

G. T.'s failure to keep his engagements with Bishop James, Pillsbury, &c. before the opening of the Conference, is greatly against him; and his whole treatment of Pillsbury appears to have been small and ungenerous. - I fear his poverty, not his will, had ^{put} ~~led~~ him in some degree into the power of Jos. Sturge, and that now as well as in Novr. last, he was acting and talking in fetters.
Alas, for him. I doubt not, he suffers in his thoughts.

I sent to you, last week, thro' Miss Estlin the Bill of Lading upon a box of Tracts, Pamphlets, & Bazaar Reports, addressed to you, & shipped by E. Train & Co's Packet Ship "Star of Empire". The 28th Feb. was her regular day of sailing; but she was to be delayed several days. The box is subject to your order - is not consigned to any one in Liverpool - so you must have some one on the look-out for it; - the freight is paid in Boston. I hope it may have a quick passage.
Had I known of the delay, I think I should have decided to send it by the Steamer. I fear you won't see it before the first of April. Let me know, when received. - Truly Yours Saml May Jr
